Winston: 'Composition' is the title of the all-instrumental album by American guitarist Lindsey Boullt. Remarkable fact about him; he started playing the guitar when he was 21 and in five years time he graduated successfully from the Guitar Institute of Technology in Los Angeles. A natural talent, so to speak.

On this album a few great names are coming across as well; Stu Hamm on bass, Derek Sherinian on keyboards and Jeremy Colson on drums to name a few. Three men who know how to display their musicianship on such a particular album of course. With his varied guitar playing, that regularly features some Oriental influences, which is also created by the sitar playing of Peter van Gelder, Boullt knows how to play and solo very well. Most songs carry a hook over which Boullt pours his guitar licks and solo's. I really like such an album from time to time and I think Boullt can be very proud of 'Composition'.
